FROM THE PRINCIPAL

A few years ago one of our alums who had moved on to high school had his backpack stolen. It had his wallet and his phone in it, so he didn't have any way to reach his mom. He went to a high school not far from here, so he walked to Bethany and showed up in our office. He was pretty upset, but we were able to calm him down and reach his mom. While I was upset for this student's unfortunate experience, I'm was so glad he remembered that we care about him and that he's always a part of the Bethany family.

This experience reminded me of something I'd read before from the book "Sticky Faith": kids need other significant adults besides their parents who are invested in them and can be a resource in times of trouble. Can you think of who served in that role for you, and can you think of who is serving in that role for your children? Finally, are you serving in that role for someone else's kids? J

Sticky Faith is a great book, but if you don't have time to read it, here's an article that sums up the idea of the importance of kids having a "tribe" or "village" of invested adults: <https://www.annanordberg.com/article/why-kids-need-a-strong-network-of-supportive-adults-and-how-to-build-that-tribe>

Have a wonderful week!
Dr. Fink
